"On account of its buil-fights and cock-fights, Juarez has long been a city of feast-day pilgrimage for Americans in search of a new sensation. The Spaniards, who became addicted to the buil-fight habit in the 12th century, during the occupation of the tury, during the occupation of the berian peninsula by the Moors, in-roduced this sport into Mexico shorttroduced this sport into Mexico shortly after their overthrow of the Aztecs. The fights in Juarez are not so elaborately staged as those in Mexico City, for native bulls are used customarily, and these have not the ferocity of the animals imported by the capital from Andaiusia, at a cost, frequently, of $1,200 (Mexican) each.

"On important bull-fight days the population of Juarez tops the 10,000 mark, while there is a relative temporary decrease in the size of the fifth city in Texas—El Paso, which had snown to more than 20,000 in 1910."
